About the Music

Based on the enchanting melody of Sakura, Sakura, this fantasy on the popular Japanese folk song winds through several harmonic shifts and melodic variations. The fantasy begins almost immediately. While the phrase structure of the original tune remains intact (one can superimpose the original melody over the initial 6 measures and hear how phrasing is the same), the melody itself develops subtly beginning in measure 3. The true melody of the folk song is presented almost verbatim at measure 9 before the music starts to develop and transform in the section beginning at measure 15. The first major harmonic shift of the piece occurs at measure 23, when the total center moves from B minor to D Major. This continues into measure 29, where the bass voices introduce an altered version of the melody based on the exact same rhythm of the traditional tune, but the overall melodic contour has been changed, now moving upward (whereas the original has an overall downward motion, especially by the end of the fourth measure). Finally, after the second (and most powerful) climax of the work, the music moves back into the opening tonality of B minor. This time, however, the B minor tonality embraces the upward movement of the melodic line (which began at measure 29). The fantasy concludes with a shift back to D Major in the last measure, making the transition smooth by using two notes as common tones to each chord (F# and D).
